HIS INVENTIONS.

James S. Doyle, superintendent of ear equipment for the Interborough and elevated lines, and Mr. Hedley's partner in the railway device patent business, succeeded Mr. Hedley in the business, succeeded Mr. Hedley in the witness chair. He is ruddy-cheeked, gray-haired and forty-four years old. He gets $10,000 a year, he said, paid by the Interborough, the Manhattan Elevated and the New York Railways Company. His office and shops are at Ninety-eighth Street and Third Avenue. He has charge of construction and operation of every kind of electric transportation used on the roads. He said there are as many kinds of electric traction as there are kinds of automobiles. automobiles.

'You are an inventor?" "You are an inventor?"

"Just a man of ordinary sense, I'd call it, employed in railroad development and operation," said Mr. Doyle. "For instance, we were the first to take heaf-treated axiss automobile stock, in electric cars—axies that cannot fail."

"You are an inventor?"

Q. Did you and Hedley patent that? A. No.
Q. Why? A. (After a pause) Why, we never thought of it.
Mr. Doyle said he had been in electric car traction since it began. He was a master mechanic in Chicago at $150 a month until he was brought here to electrify the Manhattan ele-vated lines fifteen years ago.
"And now," he said, "I'm doing the work of three men who preceded me and got a great deal more pay than I do."

Mr. Doyle declared he had nothing to do with buying any kind of mate-rial or devices for his companies. DOYLE WAS PUZZLED WHEN ASKED TO EXPLAIN. Mr. Doyle was rather puzzled when Coulsel Bainbridge Colby asked him: "What is a mechanical fluid car con-trol device?"

Q. What is it like? A. Oh, well, it is—let me see (closes his eyes).
Q. V ty, you invented it. Don't you know that it looks like? Is it an animal or mineral or vegetable? A. Oh, it is a pneumatic, mechanical device to register the amount of weight vice to register the amount of weight of passengers in a car. It is a long time since I saw one. It weighs about sixty pounds. I invented it. I gave the idea to be worked out by my assistant, Rodney Kearns.

Q. When did you invent it?

A. Shortly after we put on the low level cars in January, 1912.

Mr. Doyle never saw Hedley work on a model or at a bench. Accame up to the shop once a west or so and talked things over and looked at models. Mr. Doyle declared that there had long been low level cars and stepless cars, but that he and Hedley patented the low-level-stepless cars.

Mr. Doyle could not describe a cur-rent registering apparatus and com-plained that Mr. Colby was "asking a question with a thousand angles to it."

"But you're down on the list as in-ventor of it," exclaimed Mr. Colby. "Can't you describe it?" "Well," said Mr. Doyle, "If I could
